

American Mythology

There is a wise olde saying that warns, If something sounds too good to be true, then it probably is. For over five centuries people from across the globe have been enticed and seduced by the prospects of moving to the New World...especially America. In most cases their logic and reasoning hasnt been based on fact or reality, but on rumors and myths. Even today, there are still people from backward third-world nations that believe the streets of America are paved with gold and all they have to do is get here and pick it up. Many others are convinced there is a free education and a good job awaiting anyone who comes to claim them. The first Europeans who came to America were rich treasure hunters searching for gold, diamonds, and other imaginery wealth. Franciscco Orellana, Gonzalo Pizaro, and Sir Walter Raleigh spent years searching for El Dorado, the Lost City of Gold. Juan Ponce de Leon searched all over Florida for the Fountain of Youth. All the inhabitants of the very first colony in the USA, Roanoke Island, Virgina disappeared without a trace because they were totally unprepared for the harsh conditions they encountered. There are still many myths that people believe about America today. The vast majority of Americans are actually convinced they live in a democracy despite the fact that for 12 years of public schooling they daily recited the Pledge of Allegiance pledging an oath to the Republic. The word democracy comes from two Greek words: demos, which means common people and kratos, which means rule; therefore democracy means the common people rule or rule of the common people. There are no common people serving in the US Congress or as President. Both jobs are financially well out of the reach of the common man. Lincolns dream of a government of the people, by the people, and for the people was just another myth. The reality is a government of the people, by the rich and politically powerful, and for the lobbyists and special interest groups with bottomless pockets. Voters in America still believe they elect their President, the most powerful man in the world. The fact is the President of the USA is elected by the Electoral College not the voters. Four times now, in the short history of America, the man receiving the most votes from his fellow Americans was not elected President. What kind of democracy is that and what kind of example does it set for the rest of the world? Thanks to the Patriot Act of 2001 America is no longer a free country. Any citizens phone can be tapped or house searched without a warrant, they can be arrested and detained indefinitely without due process, and be tortured for information under the guise of the War on Terror. Justice in America is also a myth and a joke. It is entirely dependent on the amount of money one has to spend on their defense. If you are rich and have millions to spend on a dream team of attorneys you can get away with murder. If you are poor and end up with an inexperienced public defender chances are you will be found guilty even if you arent. In America you get what you pay for. Like it or not, the following are all MYTHS: (1) America is a democracy (try reciting the Pledge of Allegiance). (2) America is a free country. (3) The president of the United States of America is elected by the people. (4) There is equal justice for all in America. (5) The Federal Reserve is a branch of the government enacted to protect our monetary system. I gave you a hint on the first one, for the truth about the rest please read the book. .
