

Autism A Make Believe World

Sam shares how he escapes into imagination and uses his make-believe world to help him cope with autism. The make believe world is not the same as the real world and this causes his parents and family to become more confused about what is going on in Sams life. Sam finds comfort and safety at school with his imaginary friend named Seth. This is an autobiography about autism spectrum disorder. Sam gives great insight into the mind of someone living with autism. He talks about how he felt invisible to other kids in middle school and high school. He shares how his imaginary friend Seth helped him go to school every day and allowed him to be successful. Seth explains how escaping into imagination helped him cope with autism growing up and gives the reader some useful tips on connecting with children with autism. Seths story is unique and he shares it with the reader to help them help their children.

Here is an excerpt from the book. The other kids did not want to interact with me so I created imaginary friends in middle school. I needed someone to like me but because other kids thought of me as being different I could not ask real kids to like me or talk to me. Instead I needed to create a make-believe friend to help me live with my autism. Those imaginary friends really did help me cope a lot with autism. I cannot imagine where I would be today if it was not for imaginary friends helping me. Seth was one of my imaginary friends and he always went to school with me and he would never let me go anywhere alone. He knew that he had a job of protecting me and I took Seth with me everywhere I went. Seth was a life-saver in middle school and high school and often times I would have been sitting alone during my lunch hour if it was not for Seth. Seth pretty much was my main friend in high school. He really took care of me and made me feel loved and special.
