

How To Influence Your Friends And Change Their Mind In Easy Way

Making friends and forming new relationships is a reality everyone must face in life. From interactions with immediate family members, classmates, colleagues in the office, spouse, children etc there's no escaping the reality and necessity of friendship. Simply put, to achieve success in any area of life you are going to need friends. Many people think an easy-going eccentric personality is all that's needed in making new friendships, actually why this might be helpful, it's not important. One thing that is important in making new friends is appearance. Appearance can make or mar the process of friendship with an individual even before you speak the first word. A popular maxim says dress the way you want to be addressed. This is especially true when meeting new people. While there's no particular correct way of dressing because different occasions warrant different modes of dressing, it is expected that whatever the occasion it is necessary to wear clean, crisp, well-fitting items of clothing that has coordinated colors and patterns complementing each other. A big part of appearance is the hair, for both males and females it is important that it be kept tidy and well-trimmed always. Complementing appearance in the art of striking up conversation is active listening; the other party must feel that their words and opinions are being heard. A gentle smile and good use of personal space will definitely come handy too. But what happens when one suddenly develops cold feet and lacks the basic self-confidence to strike up conversation? Is it ideal to make friends with just anyone? How do you boost your self-confidence? Secrets of maintaining friendship with God as well as maintaining all-round healthy relationships with family and friends have been discussed in intricate detail in this book in order to improve the social life of its readers.
